Fred Hutch Cancer Center and UW Medicine, in collaboration with the Black and African-descent Collaborative for Prostate Cancer Action (BACPAC), invite you to the 2nd Annual BACPAC Prostate Cancer Community Research Symposium. This is a free event that brings together community members, advocates, researchers and clinicians in a forum expressly designed to meet the needs of the Black community for education and action around prostate cancer equity. Prostate cancer equity means that everyone should have a fair opportunity to prevent, find, treat and survive prostate cancer, regardless of race, sexual orientation, financial resources, physical abilities or where they live. The symposium will also provide an opportunity to engage in co-learning designed to facilitate greater awareness and understanding between patients, clinicians and researchers.

Sessions include:

- Speakers from national research and advocacy organizations
- Presentations from local and national research projects that address prostate cancer equity
- Community learning sessions on prostate health and prostate cancer fundamentals
