

Humans of Science Meet-Up

Sponsored by the DLMP JEDI Committee

Friday, 2/28/25

UWMC Room C516C

What:

Come join us for an open discussion with a guest from the UW biomedical research faculty at large (clinical, basic, translational) who will share who they are, what they do, and how their unique identity has shaped and challenged the ways in which they navigate a successful scientific career. Each meeting will feature a different faculty member and will provide a safe space for honest conversations about career pathways, mentorship, advancement, resources, and our intersectional identities.

Why:

Science thrives on our individuality, but it doesn't always feel that way. Sharing common experiences can help bring context to a challenging career path. This bi-monthly meet-up is intended to broaden the access of DLMP trainees to senior faculty of diverse identities and research/clinical career paths in the UW community and beyond.

Who:

This meeting is closed to regular faculty (with the exception of the guest and a facilitator) but open to Acting Instructors and all DLMP-associated trainees including Postbaccalaureate Researchers, Graduate Students, Postdocs, Medical Fellows, Residents. DLMP Assistant Professor Mariya Sweetwyne and M3D Graduate Student Shyanne King will attend each meeting and facilitate the conversation.

Guest Human:

Justin Bullock, MD, is a clinician researcher in Nephrology at the University of Washington School of Medicine and the co-director of the Docs with Disabilities Initiative. Justin is passionate about creating safe environments in medicine where everyone in the hospital is able to bring their authentic selves to work in the spirit of healing. His primary research centers on how educators can foster identity safety in the learning environment, where all members of the healthcare team can be their authentic selves in the workplace. Drawing on his dual identities as a patient and provider with bipolar disorder, Justin believes deeply that medicine is a lifelong journey of healing as much for providers as it is for patients.

But will there be food?: Yes.
